This January, the c.sides festival, the largest festival for electronic music and media arts in Israel (and probably in the Middle East) will give its first presentation in Germany.

c.sides, an Israeli-German initiative, will go into its third year in 2007. The project curators, Till Rohmann AKA Glitterbug (Cologne) and Ronni 'Macaroni' Shendar (Jerusalem) decided bring the project into visibility also in Germany and to bring forth a series of productions over on this side of the ocean.

This first event will commence in Berlin with a 12 hour showcase that follows the structure of the c.sides Festival in Jerusalem - an array of presentations, commented video art screenings and, of course, a full night of performances and dj sets. All participating performers and artists performed and have been involved in the productions in Israel over the past two years.
